Having to configure an action is a good thing. Just because it's highly customizable does not mean that someone else couldn't make a convincing-looking action on the fly. I like that I get the opportunity to alter Photoshop automatically after my changes have been made. The only exceptions I have come across are when there was a significant performance drop or when my computer acts up. This version of Photoshop has everything that we loved in Lightroom, and more. Release of a 'release' version (admittedly only 1.0/1.1, no 5.0) is the key difference, but it does not mean it was a bad Lightroom version. Actually, it is becoming more and more apparent that Lightroom 5 is much more popular, as they have been caught asking on forums how could they get their ass kicked by 1.1 version. Users are complaining that they miss the features that were in the interface-rich Lightroom 5. The long-awaited changes made to the darkroom workflows and 'Lens Blur' functionality has significantly improved. The new Lens Blur tools can now be applied to any area of an image (where a newer version of Photoshop lets you) and the grids created by Lens Blur are useful in determining where light sources are located in a photo. Although not perfect, these edits are more obvious and effective than the preview functionality on the CC version, which while offering a preview, is ultimately inferior to the edit tools. So this is where Photoshop Sketch comes in—it truly is a unique iPad Pro app. From the get-go, it is obvious that this app has a truly great amount of similarities to a pen-and-paper-and-ink drawing process. That makes it very easy to get into. The pencil allows for a range of line widths and colors, and using the Apple Pencil eraser makes it easy to erase mistakes. You are not constrained by maximum line length, for example. However, the pencil is not a pressure sensitive one, so certain features are difficult to execute and are best suited to the Pencil.

Over the last three years, Chrome has been working to empower web applications that want to push the boundaries of what's possible in the browser. One such web application has been Photoshop. The idea of running software as complex as Photoshop directly in the browser would have been hard to imagine just a few years ago. However, by using various new web technologies, Adobe has now brought a public beta of Photoshop to the web. (If you prefer watching over reading, this article is also available as a video.) This can be slightly overwhelming because there are a few different Creative Cloud plans to pick from according to what your area of interest is. To make things simple there are 3 different options that you will have to choose from that include Photoshop. First the 'Photography' plan which is $9.99/mo and grants you access to Adobe Photoshop and also Adobe Lightroom which is a program that allows for detailed photo editing. This is a great value considering the second option is $20.99/mo for use of only Photoshop. The third and final option which I think is the best option is the Student and Teacher plan that is $19.99/mo and includes access to every Adobe program available. This is an amazing value because you get access to everything Adobe has to offer. From there you can learn and try new programs that Adobe offers to see what your favorite is.
