Adobe Photoshop CC 2020 Starting with the next version of this popular software it looks like the company is trying to add a new post-processing workflow to Photoshop CC, as opposed to simply bringing a lot of features to v2.4.0. The adaptive brush and vignette adjustments are now part of it; there's a Clarity slider, a Highlight Exposure feature and a few color stabilization functions. Hardware design sheet codes have been revised, somewhat, so that the entire machine looks attractive. But, mostly, the new 2020 operating system appears to have been designed to get rid of redundant Windows function and add a bunch of third-party software, including Google Chrome, Edge, and EdgeHTML. It's a bit like getting a new Super Nintendo machine or a new, sixth-generation Apple iPhone only to use a software emulator to play old games. The numbers on the sheet codes featured on the top of the machine have been changed, but Apple doesn't specify which machines would be affected by this change. The anticipated release was September, 2019. The codes 15U4AA, 15U4AB, 15U4AC are the codes that will change and the code that subscribers will have to worry about. The 15U4AA code was on machines with the regular apple screen cover, the 15U4AB on ones with a white one, and the 15U4AC on ones with a black one. The Apple Pencil includes Digital Ink that integrates the touch capabilities of the iPad with the pointer capabilities of the Pencil. As shown here, Digital Ink works in tandem with the drawing tools of Photoshop.
